MANCHESTER AND VICINITY.

Briefs.—City brick-makers are much encouraged by the large number of orders received for and the popularity which seems to have been acquired abroad for that description of Manchester product. They are kept busy filling orders.

The June term of the City Court commenced yesterday. The case of Jones against The Manchester Coffee Factory, damages for injuries sustained by the machinery, was set down for trial by a jury of Richmond parties. The following ten days were given over to the trial of John S. Dodson, Howard and Ward, and Corbin Warwick, Jr. A jury of twelve was then selected from those who had attended, and the trial proceeded.

The pleasant news has been received here that the Board of Supervisors of Chesterfield are busily engaged preparing for a general and thorough repair of the county roads in accordance with the provisions of the act of the last General Assembly. The county levy contains a special tax to defray the contemplated expense.

Country farmers are preparing for the harvest, now in the immediate future. The yield of wheat promises to be good.

Rev. Robert F. Jackson, Jr.

The following from the gifted pen of Captain W. Gordon McCabe, and which appeared in Saturday's Index-Appeal, will be recognized as a worthy tribute to the memory of Mr. Jackson by all who knew and loved him. After mentioning briefly the death of Mr. Jackson the article says:

Thus in the very flower of his youth and on the threshold of his usefulness has been struck down one who, though young in years, had already achieved much, and who, had length of days been granted him, was surely destined, in the judgment of those who could fairly measure his character and abilities, to make for himself a notable place among the great and good men of his generation.

For worldly fame he cared not, for his was a nature modest and reserved to the verge of shyness. Yet such was the innate resolution of the man, so wide his requirements, so single his purpose, whatsoever the thing to which he put his hand, that the world, despite this modesty and reserve, would surely have acknowledged him a leader. Here he was born and here he received his early education.

In 1856 he entered the University School of this city, where he speedily won the love and respect of his instructors by his high character and the absolute thoroughness and fidelity with which he executed his tasks. Among his school-fellows he was always the ideal "boys' boy," though shy and grave of demeanor, full of fun—possessed of ready humor, a leader in athletic sports, always ready to help another in school tasks, and blessed with unfailing good nature.

But from a lad his calling in life had, it would seem, been clear to him. It was not his nature to speak much of the purpose which he held to so quietly and resolutely. He made no secret of his deep religious conviction, yet he spoke of it rarely and to but few. It was to him the one thing in life—so holy, so awful, that he shrank in the intensity of his feeling from the common talk about it. But those who knew him well, who loved and honored him, could easily discern that it not only shaped every action of his blameless life, but that in truth it was to him life itself.

In 1874 he entered the Episcopal Theological Seminary, near Alexandria, where memories of his superb scholarship and fervid piety will long survive; graduated in 1876, and thereafter gave himself to active ministerial work, holding charges respectively at Wheedle, West Va., Mason, Ga., and latterly at Richmond, Va.

It is not part of his purpose to speak of this portion of his life here. It is written for us in the hearts of thousands whom he has comforted and strengthened in the perplexities, trials, and sufferings which make up a large part of human life.

Broken down by his incessant labors, his constitution unknown to himself—sapped by the insidious advance of disease, he left this city but a week ago with bright anticipations of spending a happy vacation in the Old World, the beauties and treasures of which his high culture had so well prepared him to appreciate and enjoy. Alas, he never looked on Carcasone,<sup>5</sup>

But a greater and more perfect rest has come to this true scholar, this noble gentleman, this pure and fearless servant of the Great Master.

His feet will not tread the historic cities of the Old World, nor his eyes gaze upon "the splendor that was Greece" and the glory that was Rome," but passing through the dark waters, upheld by that Staff to which he had clung from a child, the tired feet are even now ringing with all the old alertness of boyhood along the streets of that Eternal City whose walls are of Jasper and "the Lamb the light thereof," and the weary eyes are kindling with infinite brightness as they gaze upon that infinite glory promised to those who are faithful unto death.

The commencement exercises at Washington and Lee University, at Lexington, were inaugurated on Sunday by the delivery of the baccalaureate sermon by the Rev. Dr. Hawthorne, of this city.

More universally recommended than any proprietary medicine made, A sure and reliable tonic, Brown's Iron Bitters.
